How to be a Global Toastmaster?

by Andy Seepaul, Division H Director

"The Internet is becoming the town square for the global village of tomorrow." Bill Gates

Covid-19 has changed our world as we know it forever: working from home has become our new normal, education at all levels has become virtual, food and grocery delivery are now routine, and Toastmasters meetings are now online until the CDC recommends it is safe for small groups to meet. Virtual meetings open up opportunities for clubs to welcome guests from across the world. In addition, professional speakers can conduct workshops around the world from the comfort of their living rooms. Many Clubs are hosting World Champions of Public Speaking, authors, and subject matter experts who conduct free workshops. I recommend participating in the S.P.E.A.K series hosted by District 102, see details on Page 6. Tom Hobbs conducted a storytelling workshop for Division H Toastmasters in April that was attended by Toastmasters as far flung as New Zealand. Highway Safety Toastmasters hosted Rich Hopkins as part of his Zoom Challenge Tour to speak or evaluate within all 120 Districts in Toastmasters.

I have attended virtual Toastmasters meetings and workshops hosted by Clubs that meet across the USA, Thailand, Philippines, and India. You can find out about the next club meeting or workshop from Facebook pages that collate and curate this information, for example, the Resources for Toastmasters Facebook page has been my primary resource for virtual meetings across the world.

Technology has connected the world and made it smaller allowing us to communicate across borders and boundaries, making the world a global village. My challenge to our readers is to visit at least three clubs outside the US and file Club Ambassador Reports. ■

CLUB CORNER

Even Online - Clubs Can Have a Distinguished Year!

by Vickie Goodman, DTM, Area 81 Director

► Need more members? What club doesn't?

Online meetings are perfect for inviting guests from all over. Think about it – guests don't have to drive, get directions, or even get overly dressed. Talk up the value of Toastmasters to everyone on your contact list: your friends, family, coworkers, and neighbors...no matter where they live. Invite them to hear your next speech, or enjoy your next program. Online attendance is a great way to get folks excited and interested in Toastmasters and, believe it or not, they will be interested in joining- just be sure to ask them. It looks like online meetings are here through the summer, so new members can join with the prorated amount through September. When things open up, they can come to your club meeting or transfer their membership to a club in their area. Remember – it never hurts to ask! Start inviting people.

► Maintain your own membership by paying your dues!

Toastmasters International has extended the membership renewal to June 30th and you surely don't want to lose your good standing with your club. Contact your club treasurer or other officer to provide your credit/debit card info for online renewal. This is particularly important to small clubs – they need a minimum of EIGHT MEMBERS to renew by the deadline. What? You missed the deadline? Go ahead and renew anyway – it's never too late to help yourself and your club.

► Finish those projects!

Online is the perfect time to complete those educational goals! Members are traveling the world and attending clubs throughout Florida, the country, and the world through online meetings. Most clubs are delighted to offer a member from another area a speaking position and will assign an evaluator so you can complete a lot of projects in very little time. Check out our own Division H meeting links in this newsletter. Believe me, any of those clubs will be happy to have you attend. Search the TM website or do a google search to locate clubs meeting around the world. It's educational AND FUN! ■

Learn to Speak, Listen and Think Better With Toastmasters

by Ashok N. Shahane, DTM. This article was originally published in the April 7, 2020 edition of the Tallahassee Democrat.

Picture a young, hard-working foreign graduate student (age 28 with an accent) at a large university in New England. He diligently produced a massive dissertation of over 560 pages. Not only was his principal adviser impressed with his work, but he also announced that it was the thickest dissertation ever written and completed at this University in just two years.

Ashok N. Shahane

After completing his Ph.D., the young man began working as an Environmental Systems Engineer in South Florida.

However, his adviser encouraged him to apply to Yale University for a position as Assistant Professor in Forest Hydrology. He was delighted to be invited for an interview and spent two days being interviewed and offering presentations to 24 faculty professors and students. Unfortunately, and sadly, he did not get the job — he knew his verbal communication skills were poor, and because of this, others were not able to appreciate his expertise.

Fast forward three years and the young man has developed a comprehensive and innovative computerized mathematical model for the elaborate water system extending from Orlando to Lake Okeechobee in Central and Southern Florida. The Chief Engineer of the organization, where he works, invites the young man to present his work at a major professional conference in Ohio.

With his youthful enthusiasm and vigor, the young man made his presentation to an audience of 500 advanced engineers from around the country. And not a single question was asked. Once again, the young man's poor verbal communication skills hampered his success. He was disappointed and dejected. How do I know? Because that young man was me. I wanted to improve, but how to do so?

A short time later, a co-worker encouraged me to join a Toastmasters Club. And there I discovered the Bargain of the Century! At weekly Toastmasters Club meetings, participants learn to give speeches (most with butterflies in the stomach at first), host the meeting as Toastmaster of the day, and learn to give evaluations of speeches.

As a result, along with others, I learned to speak better, to listen better, think better, evaluate better. I learned to be a leader and manage people painlessly. Constructive evaluations helped me to conquer the fear of public speaking. I attended regularly and could tell I was improving.

A few years later, a high-level technical supervisory position was advertised in a national search for a state agency in Tallahassee. I was one of about a dozen finalists selected for the interview among the applicants from many other states. I was selected and offered this job.

The Chairman of the Selection Committee commented that just five years of participation in Toastmasters made a difference in helping me secure this job. I just completed 36 years of productive and satisfying employment with this agency as a technical expert in the environmental field.

When we see a bargain at the supermarket, we tell everyone so they can take advantage of the bargain. Here we are talking about "The Bargain of the Century."

I encourage any of you who want to become better speakers and leaders to visit a Toastmasters club or two, find out more, and take advantage of this great experience. Improved communication benefits all and makes this great nation better. ■

Active Listening is Essential to Effective Speaking

by Jesinia Jackson-Graves, Seven Hills Expressions Toastmaster

Jesinia Jackson-Graves

Listening is an action; it is something we do consciously. We have heard phrases like: "You never listen to me!"; "You hear only what you want to hear."; "You listen but you don't hear or listen!"

Kin Hubbard, an American cartoonist and journalist name declared that "Listening, is essential to your effectiveness as a speaker."

To be effective as a speaker, we must take feedback from the audience, which requires active listening to improve our presentations the next time you speak.

Good listening should not be limited to our managers; we should open our ears and minds to our friends, family, significant others, new people in our lives, and even ourselves.

Being a good listener encourages the speaker to feel valued. We need to consider the speaker's intentions and feelings without immediately injecting our own opinions. A good listener shows good eye contact, reflects what was stated, validates both the speaker's and listener's emotions.

Why is listening important? Good listening demonstrates we are paying attention to the thoughts, feelings, and showing consideration by taking time to focus on what others are saying.

When we want to make sure others are listening when we speak, we may insert phrases that specifically give that message to the other person. We may use phrases like, "Listen, I was wondering if you eat breakfast every morning?" or Nina, you wanted to tell me something? I'm all ears! Adding the phrase "I'm all ears" tells the person you're ready to listen carefully to what they're saying.

Keep in mind, listening is an action. It's something we do consciously. Keeping our ears and minds open to listening encourages the speaker to feel valued.

ASK DR. LEX

Keeping Online Meetings Professional

by Dr. Lex I. Con

Dear Dr. Lex,

This onslaught of new online meetings is great! Except for those of us with less experience, some suggestions would be helpful. And a dose of decorum.

It appears some of us are becoming a little too relaxed. During our last meeting, a member showed up on camera in his pajamas complete with a Bugs Bunny print! I'm not here to tell someone what to wear in their own home but, come on, Bugs Bunny PJs are not becoming on a grown man; and during a Toastmasters meeting, for Pete's sake! If you must, keep it behind closed doors. We're Toastmasters – professional and dignified.

I know they say a man's home is his castle. However, when ye royal highness has "guests" invited into his "electronic castle", one should use some discretion, don't you think?

Hey, What's Up Doc?

Dear Doc,

One must admit, there's nothing more comfortable than slipping into pajamas after a hard day's work. However, I think your member broke the unspoken rule on proper attire. I suggest you ask the club president to remind everyone they are on camera and to dress accordingly. Meanwhile, who's up for some cartoons?!

Dear Dr. Lex,

We had an unusual meeting last week. With online meetings being common now, instead of having "Invite a Guest", we celebrated our pets by having "Invite Your Pet". Because we can't bring our pets to a regular meeting, someone said, "Why not?" Susan was introducing her beloved Siamese cat, Fluffy. The feline must have gotten too close to the webcam. Suddenly Floyd's Schnauzer, Butterball, lunged at the screen, barking like a pack of hyenas! The abruptness of it all caused Fluffy to fly up and over Susan's head, sending her shrieking. All we could hear at this point was a cacophony of howling, barking and hissing as the other pets joined in the online skirmish.

It was a disaster.

I'm all for "theme" meetings and "trying new things". Don't you think it usually pays to stick with the basics?

No Pets and Toastmasters for Me

Dear No Pets,

Your club brought new meaning to having "fun meetings". Yes, I think Toastmasters meetings are not an appropriate place for pets. However, I do applaud your club for trying something new. Keep it up. Your members will enjoy the variety in the long run.

Educational Moment on the Educational Minute

Source: <http://karenstorey.com/PATHWAYS/16-EducationalMinute.htm>

Does your club go through the same routine, week after week? Want to add spark to your meetings? Then consider adding an educational minute to the agenda. There's more to Toastmasters than most of your club members are aware of - and we all know that Pathways is a new and exciting program that has a wealth of un-discovered information.

Why not schedule a one-minute educational session each meeting? Get together with all club officers and plan which topics you want for your Educational Minute - who will present and when.

Pick members who are enthusiastic and eager to learn and share and ask them to present to the club one single aspect of Pathways. Keep it short and to the point. Don't do special presentations for 'credit' or as a speech project - but just to give more information to the group. If you keep them to a minute or so, they won't take up a speaking slot and won't add much time to the agenda, but will add significant value.

Remember, just because you know some of this information, it doesn't mean other members do. You get new members all the time - and some other members may never have been exposed to this information. ■
